

PEACE OUTLOOK BRIGHTENS UP

Miners Use Conciliatory Methods To Prevent Strike On First Of April.

OHIO IS TO JOIN PENNSYLVANIA

Illinois Operators To Be Left Practically Alone In Proposed Fight Against The Advance In Wages Asked For By Union Workmen.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Indianapolis, Ind., March 17.—Responsive to President Mitchell's wishes the miners' national convention Friday decided upon conciliatory measures in the hope of avoiding a strike. It now remains for the bituminous operators to adopt a similar attitude and meet the miners half way.

The early arrival in Indianapolis of Francis L. Robbins, who immediately went into conference with Mr. Mitchell, added to the hope that this might be accomplished. Neither Robbins nor Mitchell was willing to disclose the nature of their talk, but it is said to have been based entirely upon the possibilities of a compromise in the soft coal fields. Soon after the meeting between the big soft coal operator in the country and the miners' national leader the national scale committee of the miners reported favorably on a meeting with the operators for the purpose of endeavoring to effect a satisfactory settlement of the wage question.

Outlines Mitchell's Plans.

The program which President Mitchell wishes followed in the negotiations, was explained by one of his close advisers as follows:

"The scale committee will meet the bituminous operators and endeavor to get a compromise proposition from them. It is hoped an offer will be made to bring the wages up to the standard which existed before the 5.55 per cent reduction in 1902. If such a proposal is made the miners' convention probably will accept it. The Ryan resolution will not stand in the way. If the operators state they wish to settle on such a basis the miners will be willing. Each district even may settle its own dispute by itself. As for the anthracite situation, that will be shaped largely by the results of the bituminous negotiations."

The anthracite dispute is waiting upon the bituminous. It is the policy of the miners' leaders to play the bituminous operators, so to speak, against the anthracite operators. An appeal to the strike commission named by President Roosevelt, therefore, will probably be made at a later date, if it is decided upon.

Joint Meeting Tuesday.

It is planned now to have the first joint meeting of the operators and miners on Tuesday. The operators will convene Monday. The first matter to be taken up will be the question of accepting the invitation of the miners for a joint conference. Little doubt exists that such a conference will be held.

Whether the operators would be a unit in the position they will take is uncertain. The old men have gone on record as unalterably opposed to any wage concessions. Likewise have the Ohio and Indiana operators. This leaves Mr. Robbins, representing the great interests of the Pittsburg Coal company, and a few other influential coal men seemingly alone in opposition to a strike. Influences are at work, however, to bring the Ohio men to the side of the western Pennsylvania operators. Their interests, for one thing, are said to be closely allied.

Southwest Not Real Factor.

Indiana is the least important of the states in the central competitive district, and is scarcely a factor in the situation. Neither are the southern states. With Pennsylvania and Ohio united in favor of peace, Illinois practically would be left alone to fight. There are few who can see anything except a tie-up of the Illinois mines April 1, either through a strike or a shutdown.

A representative of Mr. Robbins, who is here in company with the big Pittsburg operator, declared that when the operators are ranged on one side, fully two-thirds of the soft coal men will be found to be in favor of peace. He did not say, however, if the operators were willing to make concessions in order to maintain this end.

Kentucky Girl Wedded to Virginian After Odd Introduction—
Birthdays of Both.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Louisville, Ky., March 17.—A dispatch from Glasgow, Ky., says that Miss Esther Lyons of that city and Barney Friedman of Norfolk, Va., are to end a most romantic courtship with a wedding today. The bride is the daughter of a poultry farmer near Glasgow and has attended to shipping eggs for her father. Some time ago she etched her name on an egg with a pin. The egg, hard-boiled, eventually was handed to Mr. Friedman by a hunchman in Norfolk. Friedman put the egg in his pocket and called for another to eat in its stead. Then he went home and wrote to Miss Lyons. She answered his letter, and so a regular correspondence began. Mr. Friedman paid a visit to Kentucky and the result was the announcement of their wedding to take place today, which happens to be the birthday of both.

CLEVELAND ENTERS SEVENTIETH YEAR

Twenty-One Years Since First Inaugurated—Holds Such Record Among Latter Day Executives.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Princeton, N. J., March 17.—Former President Cleveland enters upon his seventieth year tomorrow. The ex-President shows few signs of his age. His fishing and hunting and other forms of outdoor enjoyment have kept him robust and healthy.

It has now been twenty-one years since Mr. Cleveland was first inaugurated. Other presidents have survived longer than that after taking the oath of office. John Adams, inaugurated in 1797, lived twenty-nine years afterward, to die on the same day as Thomas Jefferson. Jefferson survived twenty-five years after beginning his first term. Madison's record was two years' better. John Quincy Adams made a record of twenty-nine years, Martin Van Buren twenty-five, and Tyler twenty-one, the same as Cleveland. Fillmore survived twenty-four years. It is a significant fact, and one that goes to show how much greater is the strain of office now than in the time of Fillmore, that Mr. Cleveland is the only man who has lived a score of years after becoming President since the Fillmore administration.

CALLS CANNON HOUSE DESPOT

Missouri Democrat Flays "Uncle Joe" As Supreme Dictator Of Lower Legislative Branch.

GRANTS RIGHTS ONLY AS FAVORS

Declares That Representative Was Forced To Beg The Speaker For Permission To Introduce Bill To Lease Lands.

[SPECIAL TO THE GAZETTE.]

Washington, March 17.—"You sit an enthroned despot, subjecting the rights and destinies of this great people to the dictates of your own unbridled will." This missile was hurled at the head of Speaker Cannon by Representative Shackelford of Missouri, a democrat, in the house Friday. "This great people," referred to the citizens of Oklahoma and Indian Territory, and the congressman was speaking about the statehood bill. The outburst caused such great confusion that few members heard all that he said, but when Mr. Tawney recovered from his surprise he interposed an objection, and the man from Missouri was stopped.

The house had been considering a bill permitting the leasing of 5,000 acres of arid land in La Plata county, Colorado, to the P. F. U. Rubber company for the cultivation of the rubber plant, which was introduced by Mr. Brooks of Colorado.

Speaker Grants Favors.

Mr. Shackelford was given permission to discuss the measure. First he had this to say about the manner in which Mr. Brooks got his bill before the house:

"The gentleman was not recognized until he had first surrendered his constitutional rights as a representative of the people and crept into your private room, Mr. Speaker, there to supplicate you to extend to him your grace."

"No member can submit any matter to a vote of the house until he shall have first sought and found favor in your sight. The constitution contemplates that the speaker shall be the servant of the house. In defiance of the constitution, you have made yourself its master. You have packed every committee so that no bill can be reported without your consent. Unless you are willing no member can move to discharge a committee from the consideration of a bill and take it up in the house."

Checks Statehood.

Then Mr. Shackelford switched to the statehood controversy, saying: "Who stands to-day between a progressive, enlightened people and the statehood to which they are entitled? You, sir. Only you. You crack your whip and a majority of this house cowers at your feet. You turn your thumbs down and the house deals a death blow to prostrate, bleeding Oklahoma."

Here Mr. Shackelford said he had read in the morning papers that "Uncle Joe" had given it out flat-footed that he would not permit the house to concur in the senate amendment to the statehood bill, and then proceeded: "What a horrible announcement to be made in a free country!"

Members Must Decide.

Supporters of the speaker say all the talk about the statehood bill is mere "buncombe," because the first vote upon that bill in the house next week will be on the question, which the democrats now assert the speaker will not permit to be presented. Under the rules of the house, as today interpreted by the speaker, the members must by their votes refuse to accept the senate bill before the speaker can carry out his program to make a fight with the senate over the

Two thousand votes yesterday—the last day of the first week—tells a story of success far more eloquent and convincing than it could be told in any other way. The votes which made this record began coming in early, kept increasing in volume throughout the day, and when the polls were finally closed to tabulate the returns for this bulletin the totals had far outdistanced the most sanguine expectations for them. It was just such a day's balloting as was hoped for but hardly expected and as an exhibition of popular approval it left nothing to be desired.

Some of the more startling developments are found in the large number of votes which placed Mr. Hemmens, of the Janesville Court of Foresters, in nomination and gave him the lead.

WRITES OF TRIP TO OLD PANAMA

feels that they are living close to nature in a place like that.

The three miles left to cover after leaving the Savannahs was over a country devoid of even a path to lead one right. One of our drivers knew the direction to go so he took the lead and brought us to our destination successfully. The dry season was apparent from the general condition of this stretch of country. The land was rolling with mountains in the distance on the left and the calm Pacific on the right. The coarse grass covering the land was brown and dry and there were deep cracks in the earth showing the evaporation of moisture to a considerable depth. The scenery would have been dreary except for the varied shades and tints of brown to be seen. It was as fine a study in brown as it was possible to see. Every shade was to be seen from the rich reddish brown of the clay soil to the golden browns of the vegetation. It was a scenery that would delight the heart and eye of an artist. Our drive ended abruptly for we came to a dense tropical forest, with only a narrow path cut through it. The drivers told us the carriages could go no farther. We would have to walk the remaining distance, so we all entered the path leading through the jungle. It proved to be short for we soon came out on the sandy beach where the tide was out and we were able to walk on the damp, well packed sand the entire distance of a mile to the ruins. A short distance from the tower is an artistic stone arched bridge over a chasm of fifty feet or more where, in the rainy season, a heavy discharge of water emptied into the ocean. We climbed onto this bridge and of course had to be "taken" by the Kodak owner, but the isthmian atmosphere is not kind to kodak films so no impression was left on the exposed film. It was a great disappointment to us to learn of the failure of all our pictures that day for we had some fine subjects.

This bridge led directly to the tower. We were told that the tower was a part of some large building for within a half mile of the tower are the ruins of what was unmistakably a cathedral for the graves and headstones are there in abundance, and the walls are in the form of a cathedral. The walls attached to the tower did not look as if they enclosed a place of worship as much as they did a fortification. On the back side of the tower as shown in the picture is a circular wall with ruined stone steps up a few feet showing that the stairway originally led to the top of the tower. Orchids hung in profusion from the stone wall and vines clambered over it from base to summit, inside and out. The mason works perfect on three sides and but little damaged on the fourth, except the destruction of the stone stairway.

The early breakfast and long ride had made us ravenous, so we sent the drivers out at once to find water while we made a stone fireplace in one corner of the tower and soon had our coffee brewing and some ham frying over the coals. We felt like gypsies sitting on the ground around the lunch baskets with our tin pail of coffee in the center convenient for us to replenish our tin cups when they were empty. Never did hot coffee, fried ham and bread and butter taste better. We wondered if the occupants of that tower three or four hundred years ago had as happy a time as we were having.

Time did not permit our investigating the ruined city which lay some distance farther on. No walls of any height are standing so Morgan must have done a thorough work of destruction for it was a large, thriving walled city.

The tide was fast coming in when we started back to our carriages. As it rises 20 to 24 feet every twelve hours, it does not waste time about it. We found ourselves either compelled to walk in the hot, soft sand high up on the beach or wade in the water. A short trial of the hot sand made us choose the alternative. Then we were glad it was a "hen party". It was great fun to have the increasing waves come dashing up against our feet.

The hot sun and rising tide did not improve our personal appearance. We were a sorry looking sight that rode into Panama about four o'clock. We were obliged to do some shopping. No one seemed shocked at our appearance so we boldly went into the stores and made our purchases, then made for our train. The ride home was a quiet one for no one felt equal to carrying on a conversation. It did not take us long to reach slumberland after striking the bed.

MARY HUMPHREY.

DRAGGING

down pains are a symptom of the most serious trouble which can attack a woman, viz: falling of the womb. With this, generally, come irregular, painful, scanty or profuse periods, wasteful, weakening drains, dreadful backache, headache, nervousness, dizziness, irritability, tired feeling, inability to walk, loss of appetite, color and beauty. The cure is

ALL METHODISTS
FOR ONE NIGHT

MANY FAITHS REPRESENTED AT A BIG BANQUET

ATTENDED BY 300 MEN

And Given in Basement of Parlor of Cargill Memorial M. E. Church
Last Evening.

Six long tables tastefully decorated with clusters of roses and ferns and lighted candles and overhung by American flags greeted the three hundred men who attended the banquet given in the basement parlors of the new Cargill Memorial M. E. church last evening. Before the serving of the repast many took occasion to inspect the new edifice and its appointments and admire the several new features in church construction which make it the most modern building of the kind in the city. Rev. J. W. Laughlin offered the blessing and about seven o'clock twenty young men and women of the congregation began their ministrations to the hungry multitude. The attractive menu cards, printed in green, announced "A feast of reason and a flow of soul" immediately after the more material viands had been disposed of, with Rev. Richard M. Vaughan, pastor of the First Baptist church, as master of ceremonies. "Representatives of all creeds, of all political opinions, and of all business careers—we are all Methodists tonight," he said by way of introduction. "Our presence here is an expression of the interest, which, as men, we have in the work of the churches. It is sometimes claimed that the work is carried on almost entirely by women. Henry Ward Beecher said of his church at Lawrenceburg that there were 19 members who were women and one who was nothing." Janesville boasted of strong active men in all the churches. The toastmaster announced that as there was no instrument company, the singer, the soloist, George Kettner, would have to be dispensed with. Instead the Lotus Male quartette would be heard. The four musicians gave a beautiful rendition of "Annie Laurie" and responded to an encore with a plantation lullaby.

The Law and the Gospel

In introducing T. S. Nolan, who was to respond to the toast, "The Law and the Gospel," the toastmaster said that in certain of its aspects the term "the law" was elusive, as a certain minister found out. When, after he had married a young couple, the groom made inquiries regarding the fee, he said: "The law allows $2." "Well," said the groom, handing him a half dollar, "here's fifty cents—that will make it $2.50." In certain respects, also, the law and the gospel appeared to be antithetical. Reading an epitaph to the effect that "Here lies a lawyer, and an honest man," a countryman had marveled as to how they ever buried both of those fellows in one grave. He had no doubt but that Mr. Nolan, who "listens frequently to good preaching," would be able to clear up all these little difficulties. The speaker complained that the toastmaster had forestalled him in this matter of several good stories which he had intended to relate. As to the once reflecting on the legal profession, they were not always worthy of full confidence. A lawyer was once making an inquiry into the character of a witness, and asked another woman regarding her reputation for truth and veracity. The latter replied that the woman in question was "all right as to truth but as to veracity—some says she does and some says she doesn't." The speaker had been harassed by some doubts regarding his ability to respond to the toast assigned him, but when he learned that Malcolm G. Jeffris was going to talk about "Methodism Past and Present," he had felt that he was probably quite as well fitted for his particular task as the others on the program. Mr. Nolan then entered into a very interesting discussion of the law, as the perfection of reason and religion, as the perfection of faith. The lawyer treats with things here and his mistakes are apparent, while the minister draws on his imagination and treats largely of the things that are speculative. "We will never know in this life but we like to believe. For none of us likes to think that this world is the end of all—that we shall never see one another after death." The speaker believed that the apostles of the law were much more conservative than the ministers. When the newspapers print stories regarding the delinquencies of men and corporations, the lawyer is apt to demand evidence, while the preacher takes John D. Rockefeller for a sermon. The preacher is not so apt to denounce the same shortcomings nearer home. The grocer who places the best berries on top, includes a few decayed oranges in the dozen, or juggles the bananas; the dentist who exhibits combination price lists for plugging teeth; the doctor or lawyer who has a combination fee, go unscathed. The preacher is sometimes not unlike the man at a country wedding who, when the parson asked: "Who gives this woman away?" answered: "I could but I'll not." In conclusion he said that owing to the influence of the law and the gospel the world was better today than it was yesterday and would be better tomorrow than it is today.

Brethren of Other Churches

S. C. Burnham gave a very pleasing response to "The Brethren of Other Churches." He spoke of the twelve church buildings erected in Janesville by eight different denominations and the zealous earnest work of each of the congregations. They all might be likened to transportation lines leading to the same union station. He likened the Methodist system to a fast, well-equipped train whose noisy whistle might worry some. The Catholic and Episcopal trains had more equipment than some others—their officers were better uniformed and there was more ceremony. The Baptist line was by the river route; the Congregational followed a high intellectual level; the Presbyterian was tunneled through many hard ledges.

Methodism Past and Present

In introducing M. G. Jeffris, who was to speak on "Methodism Past and Present," Toastmaster Vaughan said that while it might have been supposed that the next speaker's parish was the first regional district, there were reasons to conclude that in the words of John Wesley it was "the world." Mr. Jeffris expressed himself as deeply hurt at the derisive manner in which his address appeared to be hailed. A great many years ago—out in the wilds of Dakota—he had founded a Methodist church. It wasn't Methodist when he founded it but it had backslid. The speaker threatened to divide his subject into six heads, but after relating a number of mirthful anecdotes, devoted himself to the great work of John Wesley, who left luxury to labor among the people, to endure calumny, and insult, and to build up a congregation which was to number 25,000,000 people. This church had been in the forefront of progress in settling the new west of the pioneers; it was accomplishing more in the south today than most of the other churches; it had done much in Rock county. Frances E. Willard was an earnest Methodist woman of this city, who was known, respected, and loved wherever the English language was spoken. In conclusion he proposed a toast: "God speed the Methodist church. May it prosper and keep its new edifice filled. May its future be far greater than its past!"

Suppression of Crime

Frank A. Taylor in offering his toast to "The Suppression of Crime," spoke from the text that the nation and state may not expect to be free from it as long as it licenses—takes money for those things which produce it. Measures for the suppression of crime should be sane and founded on reason. The speaker was not an anarchist but he believed it was just possible that the structure of our republic might have to be rebuilt to correct prevailing defects. The Creator had never intended, for instance, that wealth should be the lot of many and fabulous wealth the lot of the few. It was not right that great bodies of men or women should depend on the existence of many should be permitted to precipitate strikes for trivial causes. The immigration laws must also be changed if crime was to be lessened. Crime would be suppressed in this country, not by socialism or anarchy, but by good, American common-sense methods. The work would be accomplished by elevating the majority which rules under our form of government.

Tribute to Ladies

Capt. Pliny Norcross gave a graceful and eloquent response to "The Women, Faithful and Helpful." He waived pretty notions and chose rather to speak of woman as a partner in business, a confidant in trouble, and man's most severe and kindest critic. He alluded to the great work that had been done by women in erecting the beautiful new edifice for the Methodist church. Only once did he depart from his eulogy to express a wish that women might always try to be as beautiful as they are—that they would not resort to so many arts that they would take off their hats in church. At the last Grand Army encampment he said that the success of the northern army had been attributed to three factors: the soldier, the mother, who furnished the soldier, and the sweetheart with whom he fought. He closed with a tribute to the home and Shakespeare's words regarding the priceless value of the woman who there presides. The Lotus quartette sang "Good Night."

STOUGHTON PUT OFF
DECLAMATORY MEET

Were Not Satisfied with Proposition
Made by Edgerton School Superintendent.

Unable to make the Edgerton contestants and their superintendent stay at home and not come to Stoughton to participate in the annual high school league declamatory contest, Stoughton postponed the event from last evening to some unsettled date in the future. Stoughton citizens imagine Edgerton is smallpox ridden and requested the two representatives of the Edgerton high school not to visit their city. Superintendent of Schools Roethe of Edgerton objected and finally gained permission to come with his two speakers on the agreement that they have their clothes fumigated just before leaving and each bear a certificate of health. Stoughton disliked this, but could not prohibit it and yesterday at the eleventh hour postponed the event. H. C. Buell of this city was to have acted as one of the judges.

Mr. Geo. Bresse's monument house on West Milwaukee street is one of the busiest places in the city. Workmen are busy cutting, inscriptions and getting the monuments ready for placing as soon as the weather permits. MR. SCHULTZ GLAD THAT HE HAS A MAXWELL.

Mr. B. C. Dinsmore:

In answer to your question as to what I think of the Maxwell, will say that for over a year before purchasing my car I investigated thoroughly in every way that I knew of to find out all I could about automobiles. I wanted to find out the simplest, most accessible, reliable and economical car that could be bought at a reasonable price. Finally a description of a car came out in one of the automobile papers which seemed theoretically to fill the bill. It was called the "Maxwell." After operating the car for a season, I can truly say that I am glad I purchased a Maxwell. I know of no more reliable car, except perhaps some high priced ones with all their greater complications. I believe the Maxwell to be the greatest automobile success of the year. I know of no car except one (a freak car) that is simpler and I know of none more accessible. I have found the car powerful enough to take me anywhere I want to go (and that means some pretty rough roads) as fast as I want to go. The car is so quiet that a conversation can be kept up between those on the front and back seats without straining the voice. Another thing which I have only lately begun to appreciate is the nicely with which the weight has been distributed, so that while it is a comparatively light car, and consequently free from tire troubles to a great extent it is a strong car and capable of standing a great deal of abuse. I have found nothing on the car that I would change except one little switch, which I changed for 90 cents. Have talked with other owners of Maxwells and they are all very enthusiastic over their cars. Yours truly,

ADOLPH R. SHULZ.

Mr. B. C. Dinsmore:

In answer to your question as to what I think of the Maxwell, will say that for over a year before purchasing my car I investigated thoroughly in every way that I knew of to find out all I could about automobiles. I wanted to find out the simplest, most accessible, reliable and economical car that could be bought at a reasonable price. Finally a description of a car came out in one of the automobile papers which seemed theoretically to fill the bill. It was called the "Maxwell." After operating the car for a season, I can truly say that I am glad I purchased a Maxwell. I know of no more reliable car, except perhaps some high priced ones with all their greater complications. I believe the Maxwell to be the greatest automobile success of the year. I know of no car except one (a freak car) that is simpler and I know of none more accessible. I have found the car powerful enough to take me anywhere I want to go (and that means some pretty rough roads) as fast as I want to go. The car is so quiet that a conversation can be kept up between those on the front and back seats without straining the voice. Another thing which I have only lately begun to appreciate is the nicely with which the weight has been distributed, so that while it is a comparatively light car, and consequently free from tire troubles to a great extent it is a strong car and capable of standing a great deal of abuse. I have found nothing on the car that I would change except one little switch, which I changed for 90 cents. Have talked with other owners of Maxwells and they are all very enthusiastic over their cars. Yours truly,

== FORTY YEARS AGO ==

Janesville Daily Gazette, Saturday, March 17, 1866.—St. Patrick's Day passed off very quietly here, but we presume it has been celebrated to some extent by the faithful.

A Hoax.—Some were seeing a chance to make a "drive" in the present state of feeling on the Fenian question, concocted a lot of bogus dispatches and put them about, in the shape of an extra on the street giving a glowing account of the Fenian successes in Canada. It created quite a little hubbub until the truth leaked out.

Editors Gazette.—In your evening paper a few days since allusion was made to the Independent Order of Good Templars in which was a slight error. Instead of the order having been in existence in the city about a year, it was organized on the 5th of June last by Miss Emery, a deputy of the G. L. of G. F. of this state, with about a score of members and the order now has in this city about 175 members. The number was steadily on the increase and this Temple Hope lodge No. 230, with the thirteen lodges in Rock county, are exerting a salutary moral influence.

The officers for the current term are: George Peck, W. C. T. M.; Banks, R. H. S.; Moon, L. H. S.; L. Martin, W. E. S.; L. James, R. S.; Miss E. Story, A. R. S.; C. W. Barnes, F. S.; Miss Story, T. W. E. Graves, W. M.; Miss Alford, D. A. M.; J. Sutherland, Chaplain; Mrs. Amisden, I. G.; H. N. Comstock, O. G.; J. M.

FOOTLIGHT FLASHES

"Zira," with Margaret Anglin, the wonderful young woman who created the title role of the famous drama, is to be the attraction at the Grand Grand Friday, March 23. We await with profound anxiety this remarkable play and player—the dramatic sensation of New York for over three months at the fashionable Princess theatre. Few artists have attained the fame in a lifetime that came to Miss Anglin in a single night when she presented "Zira" for the first time to a Broadway audience. The critics raved over both the play and its beautiful premiere, great audiences of the polite set thronged the Princess nightly, and then came the divine Sarah Bernhardt to applaud and ween theatre spectators whom she herself had brought to tears by stirring dramatic quality. "Who could imagine this grand artist's denunciation scene in the third act without applauding?" said Bernhardt, "and who with any heart at all could sit through it without bursting into tears?" Of this particular part of the great play the New York Sun says: "It gave Miss Anglin scope for one of the first, truest and most moving bits of drama seen on Broadway in many a day." She struck, in fact, the first note of vital human emotion of the season; she warmed an audience at first inclined to be coldly critical, into a burst of tumultuous applause, both sustained and prolonged. The same critic declares: "It is not too much to say the modern stage knows no other actress capable of such genuine emotional effect. She electrified the audience," says the Sun reviewer, "and the subsequent moment of contrition brought tears to the eyes of the most skeptical; her acting is refined and deftly restrained but she is none the less powerful."

Miss Anglin and "Zira" come to us in original Broadway form, as the same cast and scenic and costume detail that delighted the New York audiences during the quarter-year Princess theatre run will be in order here, and we are promised the personal efforts of Mr. Henry Miller, in the direction of the stage. This is no small assurance of a delightful evening's amusement, for Henry Miller is one of the authors of the piece, and it was this most capable player-author who produced "Zira" for Miss Anglin.

The Howard Stock Company that opens next Monday night at the opera house comes to Janesville endorsed by the press in the cities in which it has been playing. This company has been playing for four years at the Howard theatre in Chicago and it has been upon the road only a short time and is meeting with great success everywhere. Lorin J. Howard and Miss Blanch Clyde are the bright particular stars with this combination. The prices will be what is known as popular prices: 10, 20 and 30 cents. The opening bill will be the play entitled "The Man of Mystery." Don't forget the vaudeville part of the entertainment between the acts. Moving pictures, illustrated songs—the song hits of the day. Then the lady's free ticket Monday night. Every paid 30c ticket admits a lady free.

COMPARISON OF EAST AND WEST

men. But the addition of proof has little effect upon belief in an article of creed. The east is hardly amenable to argument. It believes in the segregation of the sexes in education because it practices it, quite as much as it practices it because it believes in it. The eastern freshman is sometimes so ignorant and undignified as to discuss the subject, but the upper classman and the faculty simply snuff when it is mentioned.

"Tradition, the conservative temper, and the character of eastern society itself are powerful factors in the eastern attitude toward coeducation. Though American women in the east enjoy more freedom and command more respect than their sisters in Europe, they are nevertheless not so free, self-reliant or assured of immunity as their western sisters.

"The comparative unimportance of the public school system in eastern education impresses the western visitor. The great universities and colleges of the east are almost without exception private institutions, as are also the secondary schools. The private institutions of the east are as much richer materially than the public schools as the western public institutions are better equipped than the private school is to prepare its students for the college entrance examinations. It does not pretend to reconcile the two functions of preparing for a college education those who can afford it, and preparing the remainder to enter at once upon their life work. The eastern college's elaborate machinery of entrance examinations, with accompanying misunderstanding and bickering between higher and lower institutions of hurried and insufficient preparation and gambling on chances by private tutors and their pupils, is almost unknown in the west, where the system of admission by diploma has been found satisfactory.

"It is not hard to find the reason for the predominance of the private school in the east. It is a tradition of the time when education by the state had not been systematized. The western states inaugurated the system at their very entrance into the Union. The east, too, is wealthy, and there is a greater distance between the wealthy classes and the common people than in the west. Though the east prides itself on its democracy, the mingling of the people in the west is far more accomplished fact, the disparity of wealth less in evidence, and the class spirit less discernible. The east has a greater number of old families, vast tracts of land, and more intimate association with European life and naturally attaches more weight to social position and its accompaniments than does the west. The private school is both a manifestation and a contributor to this attitude.

"Though superior in equipment and social advantages, the eastern private school has not a like superiority in those advantages which make for character. The western private school is usually denominational, though not often insistent on sectarian qualifications; its faculty is composed of men and women who sacrifice themselves for the sake of the institution; its students are in attendance as a result of parental sacrifice and their own energetic effort; it is characterized by a moral earnestness which the average eastern student or instructor would think exaggerated; the cigarette is the exception rather than the rule on the campus; the students' work is conscientious and the respect and devotion of the students toward the faculty make the life of the teacher, in spite of its hard work, an existence of deep satisfaction.

"Eastern colleges place greater emphasis on the subjects which have long stood for culture—the classics especially. If the natural sciences and other modern and vital subjects have in the west come so far to the front as to be able to bully literary study in general and the classics in particular, there is still in the east enough regard left for the ancient languages to make them indispensable to good education. In the higher institutions of the east, it is the scientific course which is usually the butt of ridicule and attack—not that there is the least lack of able college instruction in the sciences, but because the sources based upon them the preparatory schools represent the line of least resistance to which these flock the students who are deficient in ability and industry, and because the school of science in the higher institutions is largely made up of the poor material which comes from this source.

"The difference in nationality of eastern and western students and instructors is one that is quickly noted. The rolls of the eastern institution show a far more homogenous constituency than those of the western; the student body as well as the faculty is composed to a greater extent of men of American, or at least of English-speaking, ancestry. The lack of German and Scandinavian names is especially noticeable to an inhabitant of the North Central states. A temperamental difference, manifest especially in the greater equanimity and more leisurely and painstaking manner of the eastern student, is partly attributed to this racial difference, and partly to the greater youth and vigor of western society.

"It is not to be wondered at if the eastern student seems blasé. He has seen and heard and experienced more of the choice things of culture than his western cousin for the double reason that the eastern cities afford him greater opportunities and that he had the means to take advantage of them. His palate is no longer keen, or if it is he takes some pains to conceal the fact; for to seem blasé is the fashion among eastern college men. His lackluster eye and lazy gait afford a great contrast to the briskness seen on the western campus. He only represents the general spirit of the self-satisfied eastern community, however.

"There are in every student community who, by reason of naturally unsocial temperament, combined perhaps with extraordinary intellectual ability and distorted conscientiousness, are more or less withdrawn from the current of college life. However commendable the motives which actuate these men—the 'poisers' and 'sharks' of the east, the 'buckers' and 'whales' of the west—they invariably have a tendency to become cold, bloodless, narrow and unsocial. What with this dread of getting out of touch with real life, and losing his faculty of mixing with men, the average student of the eastern college, who is really a creature of strong social bent, is guilty of another, which is just as bad. He takes the maximum number of 'cuts' allowed by law, and is scrupulously careful to perform the minimum amount of work. He spends on the average much less time in study than the western man.

"The faithful attendance of the average western man, his steady and conscientious attention to his courses, and his sympathetic relations with his instructors, would hardly appeal to the eastern college man. The latter begins his term with languid attention to his work, increases his activities somewhat in the middle of the period, but does not pretend to work hard until the approach of examinations, when he gradually goads himself into a frenzied strenuousness whose last stages are midnight hours and the wet towel drawn battles with his professors. In the examination room, anxiety, and (ordinarily) jubilation. Then he begins another term of the same kind. He study men (by which he chiefly means some such strenuous application as reclining in a comfortable chair with his feet on the table, discussing with a few boon companions in the intervals of whiffs, the qualifications and chances of the football team)—and the idea is so full of virtue, so attractive, and so pleasant and easy to live up to, that in time even the proper mean of college activity comes to seem in his eyes a monstrosity of exaggeration. He is less appreciative and more inattentive in the classroom than the western student. He has no very serious objection to being interested and attentive; providing it involves no effort on his part, but he does object to forcing himself to listen. His absolute indifference in the lecture room, whether genuine or simulated, is equalled only by the frankness with which he assumes it. If the lecturer did not know him, he would seem at first sight, were he not so inattentive, and if he were not philosophic enough to know that his words were reaching all whom they had power to benefit, he might well be excused for thinking that his words had fallen only in stony places.

"The most noticeable feature of eastern college life to a western man is the relation between students and faculty. It is less sympathetic and more mechanical than in most western institutions. The results, so far as instruction is concerned, may not differ widely, but the process does differ somewhat. The more or less god-natured struggle which is always going on in any institution between faculty and students—the one doing its best, to get done what it considers the proper amount of work, the other doing their best to reduce that amount of work to a minimum—is much more intense in the east. The result is that an infinite number of rules hedge him about, and experience has made them almost automatic. The process of determining his standing at the end of the semester is almost absolutely mathematical. It is a case of an absentee faculty governing through printed regulations. He learns to take advantage of every legal right he possesses. His allowance of absences from chapel and class is usually scrupulously exhausted. The weekly report of absences by the instructor, the weekly sessions of the absence committee to listen to excuses, the frank indifference of the student to his instructor's opinion, so long as he does not exceed his legal limit of absence are features more or less unknown in the west, where discipline of the kind, except on special occasions, is less necessary. Naturally the student's attempt to evade requirements results in an increase of the faculty's demands. The eastern instructor asks more of his students than the western, and gets less.

"Efficient though the government of the eastern student is, it nevertheless tends to create a distance between him and the faculty. The eastern student is more inclined than the western to look upon his instructor as a taskmaster and an enemy. The student's mortal dread of being thought a 'boot-licker' and the professor's equally strong dread of being thought anxious to curry favor with the students are symptoms which are disheartening to one who has been accustomed to freer and more natural relations.

"The average western student has a livelier sense of his opportunities and responsibilities; he works harder and more steadily, he requires less governing, and is more in sympathy with his faculty, with whom rather than for whom he works. Agitation for shortening the college course, might arise in the west on account of its expense, or because it kept a man too long from entrance into his profession, but never because it was a longer period than was necessary for the work of the course, or because it confirmed the students in habits of idleness or dawdling. But it must not be supposed that the eastern man is not practical in his view of education. Whatever his methods and purposes, he looks upon his college education as an investment that will pay him in the end. The difference lies in the fact that the western man is more immediately practical, partly because the narrowness of his means forces him to it, partly because he is more much alive to the really practical nature of the ideal education. He is too often guilty of looking upon his college course as an equipment which will fit him directly for the business of life, and is ambitious to connect his subjects, from the very first year, with the business or profession he means to follow. In most cases a man of scant means, which he himself has earned, or to which he must add, he knows the value of his opportunities, and is anxious to get his money's worth. What's the use of this or that subject? What is there in it for me, who intend to be a lawyer, physician, engineer, preacher, teacher or a questions far too frequently heard. He builds for four years ahead only, instead of twenty-five, and lays too narrow a foundation. Even the prospective teacher, who might be expected to be broader in the choice of subjects, is often as commercially practical as the would-be engineer or lawyer.

"Yet there is plenty of idealism in the western student, and plenty of practicality in the eastern. The former, in the vigor and enthusiasm of youth, has dreams of great achievements which his imagination tells him he will perform. His very ardor and energy inspire him with faith. The latter, reared in the midst of an older society, looks at the world at longer range, and is more willing to accept conditions as they are, is more diplomatic, and content to take longer time for his effort. The western student is more likely to be extremely devoted or violently antagonistic to the church. The eastern man doesn't worry overmuch about problems. He is more likely to give assent without stopping to debate.

"On the whole, the difference existing between eastern and western education is due to perfectly natural causes. Most of the external differences are the result of differing social and financial conditions, while the difference in spirit is best accounted for on the ground of difference of temperament, which in turn is due to the same causes plus a racial difference; for the blood of the east is much more nearly British than that of the west. The differences are not essential. The aims of education in both sections are much the same, their methods are identical in the actual process of instruction, and differ only in the external details. Each has its own peculiar virtues and faults, each modifying the other to some extent, and will continue to do so, though neither will change more rapidly than the society in which it has its life."

GOES AFTER LUMBER DEALERS

Evidence of Alleged Combine Sought by Government.

Jackson, Miss., March 17.—The United States government is about to take a hand in the investigation of the alleged lumber trust in this state. Chairman McAllister of the joint legislative investigating committee today received a letter from the attorney general of the United States, which says: "It appears that the combination is operating in violation of the Sherman antitrust act. I should appreciate it very much if you will furnish this department with a copy of your report, together with the testimony taken before the legislative committee. The purpose of this request is to obtain sufficient data to serve as a basis for an independent investigation by the federal government."

Vanquished to Visit Victor.
Tokio, March 17.—To increase the friendship between Russia and Japan the czar will send an imperial prince to visit Japan, accompanied by a distinguished staff of generals and admirals. Japan will send a similar mission to Russia.

Gazette wants reach 10,000 people.

Religious Symbols on Coins.

Religious symbols on coins were common to all the countries that accepted Christianity, the bust or monogram of a ruler on the obverse and on the reverse a cross or Christian temple. But as the simplicity of classicism disappeared before the elaborate composition and decoration of the middle ages we find heraldic devices substituted, which gave a national and individual character to the coinage.

Age and Birthdays.

Here are two quarrelling to the point of a serious wager about a matter of age and birthday anniversaries. A, born Jan. 1, 1843, says he is 62 years old. B contends he is 63. It is even betting that A is a handsome widow, trying to conceal her age. The catch in this thing is that A is 63 years old, but has had 63 birthdays (one birthday and 62 birthday anniversaries).
